Cultural Analysis

uva.nl/ma-cultural-analysis

Dr Niall Martin

'Cultural Analysis is an interdisciplinary programme dedicated to the academic study of contemporary culture from a broad Humanities perspective. It trains students in the theoretically-informed close-reading of a wide range of cultural objects, including film, music, literature, visual art and new media, but also cultural phenomena, such as populism, precarity and posthumanism.'

Cultural analysis teaches you the advanced analytical skills necessary to explore contemporary cultural phenomena (art, ideas, events, political movements). In this programme, you will learn to see beyond the obvious values and hierarchies attached to cultural objects. Through combining aesthetic sensibility and political engagement, you will gain the critical and analytical skills to help you decode our globalised world. You will study objects and concepts across or beyond disciplines and learn how to formulate research questions that will shed new (social, political, artistic, cultural and theoretical) light on familiar and complex cultural phenomena or institutions.

Career prospects

This Master's will provide you with a unique foundation if you are planning to pursue a PhD degree in the humanities or in interdisciplinary social sciences, or a career in higher education, journalism, cultural management and cultural institutions (museums, theatre, publishing companies), policy and consultancy or management in non-governmental organisations and international enterprises. Recent graduates have gone to the US, the UK, Denmark and Portugal. Some have also earned a full fellowship at the Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis.

Spotlight on a course

Objects of Cultural Analysis (12 ECTS)

To be able to frame, analyse, and interpret concrete interdisciplinary objects of culture (ie. a film, exhibition, book, museum, demonstration, poem, work of art, television series, and so on); to have a working knowledge of diverse methods of cultural analysis; to be able to collaborate with other students on ongoing research projects; to set up and carry out an independent research project. We will study the importance of the object in interdisciplinary cultural analysis, in particular, the object's interaction with a variety of contexts.
