'What makes the Master's in Philosophy truly outstanding is the exceptional variety of courses on offer. No matter where you're going to or coming from, this will be a distinctive asset for your future.'

Would you like to choose from a variety of courses covering all major areas of philosophy and have the freedom to put together a tailor-made study programme that matches your unique interests? This programme is taught by staff with a broad range of expertise and encompasses both analytical and continental approaches and traditions in fields including:
• Ethics, Politics and Society
• Art, Culture and Critique
• Language, Logic, Mind and Metaphysics
• Science and Humanities, Technology and Society
You can either specialise in one of these fields or combine courses focusing on different areas. The Master's thesis is an important part of the programme. You will produce an original piece of work under supervision of an expert in a field of your choice.

Career prospects

The degree will prepare you for a variety of professional careers in which advanced analytical skills and the capacity to deal with complex and multifaceted problems are distinctive advantages. Philosophy graduates often pursue careers in education and academia, in business (management, strategy, public relations, communication) and in the world of media and journalism.

Alumni are typically, but far from exclusively, employed as independent researchers and writers in non-academic contexts, such as cultural institutes, translation and publishing.

Entry requirements

The Master's in Philosophy is open to all students with a university Bachelor's diploma in:

- Philosophy

The programme is also open to students with a Bachelor's diploma in other fields of study provided they have completed a 60 ECTS minor in Philosophy. For more information, please check:
