

Master's 2020-2021

Public International Law

Is the Netherlands complicit in war crimes when it provides non-lethal assistance to opposition groups in Syria? Can the EU impose sanctions on Russia for its alleged involvement in the downing of MH-17? Do human rights treaties apply when armed forces operate abroad? In today's globalised society, problems and challenges increasingly transcend national boundaries. Climate change, terrorism, trade wars, refugees, and mass migration are examples of issues that require global solutions, and international law is an important tool to achieve and implement those solutions.

Background

The Master's track in Public International Law provides students with a solid understanding of general international law while at the same time allowing specialisation in a particular area. The Public International Law programme can be tailored to suit your personal interests and ambitions with various electives such as human rights law, international criminal law and international environmental law. You will be taught by leading researchers in the field and professionals working in international law. In addition to larger-scale lectures, classes are taught in seminars or tutorial groups, thus allowing a challenging exchange of ideas on the latest developments and academic insights in this dynamic area of law. Over 60% of our students have an international background hence instruction is given in an international classroom setting. Students who are particularly interested in research have ample opportunity to participate in the vibrant research community at the Amsterdam Center for International Law.

Amsterdam Law Practice

This Master's offers a unique experiential education programme under the umbrella of the Amsterdam Law Practice (ALP). In ALP courses, you collaborate with fellow students on crafting solutions to practical legal problems. In Practising International Law, for instance, you will prepare a memorandum on an international legal problem as part of a clinic simulation. In the Amsterdam International Law Clinic, you will work on actual legal cases for NGOs and other clients under the guidance of our clinical staff. You can also elect to participate in a moot court or pursue an internship in the field of international law. You will learn by doing in an educational setting that prepares you to be a lawyer who makes a difference.

Max van Rij, student Public International Law

“I have always been fascinated by the emergence and growing importance of international organizations. In the course International Organization, I was able to learn more about the different types of international organisation, their legal personality, how they function on the international stage and, more specifically, the relationship between international organisations and their Member States. I was also drawn to the course International Humanitarian Law due to my interest in armed conflicts. In this Master's I was able to find answers to questions such as: When can we speak of an international armed conflict? A non-international armed conflict? How should we deal with violent non-state actors? Are terrorist groups violent non-state actors? etc. Finally, the course International Refugee Law provided me with sound knowledge of the legal issues surrounding the Syrian refugee crisis (e.g. the EU-Turkey deal), and beyond.”
