Studying with a disability

Are you interested in a study at the University of Amsterdam - or are you already studying - and do you have a disability? In case you need adjustments in class or at exams, the UvA will gladly help. The UvA offers, depending on your disability, various possibilities for support during courses and exams in order to offer you a pleasant as possible programme. Examination arrangements cannot influence the quality nor degree of difficulty of a course or study programme. Therefore, make sure to read the information below carefully, so you know what to expect in support, before you choose a study programme at the UvA.

Acknowledged diagnoses

The University of Amsterdam does not recognise all issued diagnoses. The only recognised learning disabilities the UvA recognizes are dyslexia and dyscalculia. In case of these disabilities you can upload the report of the diagnose via: www.uva.nl/dyslexia

Examples of diagnoses the UvA does not recognise as a disability are: unreadable handwriting, dysgraphia, dyspraxia or other unspecified learning disabilities. Of course, in the case you expect or face difficulties with studying, the student counsellor will gladly advise you.

Proof of disability

To be eligible for an examination arrangement, the UvA needs recent proof of your chronic disease or disability. In that case only, we are able to advise your study programme constructively about the arrangements you need to study without barriers.

The following proof is required:

- Mobile or sensory disability:
  1. in consultation with the student a statement by a General Practitioner or a specialist stating how your disability affects your studies or
  2. a print of your medical record
For psychiatric disorders, for example, AD(H)D, autism): a diagnostic report by a psychiatrist or a clinical psychologist
For dyslexia and dyscalculia: a report of a health care psychologist, a child and youth psychologist or a general remedial educationalist

Who should you turn to?

1. Student counsellor
During this appointment, we will discuss these matters:

- the way your disability affects your study ability
- the need for one or more arrangements during classes and exams
- the range of guidance and support

2. Study adviser
A study adviser can advise you on the courses you would like to take, how to set up a custom study plan and can offer support in organising exam arrangements.

3. Student psychologist
A student psychologist of the UvA can offer you counselling like individual conversations, groups, workshops and training

4. Student doctor
A student doctor has specific knowledge of student life and expertise in students’ health issues. You can contact a GP if you’re ill, if you’re concerned about your health or in case you need a prescription, a medical examination or a vaccination.
